

Pathogens & prevention

About the special

Diseases are always just a stone's throw away from any livestock herd/flock. Correct preventative measures, be it vaccination or disinfection, can ensure the animals are better protected. Increased understanding of pathogens also allows for more secure control methods.

Keeping the livestock healthy and treating them effectively in the case of a disease outbreak demands a high level of knowledge and the full attention of the farm manager and personnel. This Pathogens and Prevention special will focus on the deeper understanding of prevention and treatment of the most costly diseases. Nurturing healthier animals through feed, health strategies and management is essential, but even the most robust immune system will not keep all pathogenic bacteria and viruses out. Early detection and treatment with the right instruments in the farm managers 'tool box' can mitigate damages.

Topics include

- Improvements to biosecurity and lesson learnt from existing shortcomings
- Diseases, early detection
- Treatment of the most costly diseases e.g. Necrotic Enteritis, E. coli, Salmonella, Coccidiosis, etc.
- Vaccination
- Management aspects on farm level
- Nutritional solutions to improve the immune system
